Tunneling Broadway. On that much vexed question, of how shall Bre now occurs, I have a suggestion to make for public con-sideration, and suck your widely read columns to make it known. The object sought to be accomplished, is to furnish a cheap, safe and rapid means of public conveyance with the moving of merchandise through it with business despatch. To do this, I propose making a tunnel under Busadway, from Bowling Green up to any point that may be found necessary, in which ratis shall be laid, and cars run. In making such a tunnel, it would have to be dug as such a depth as to pass under the pipes, or sewers which cross the street; but from the small size of the manel required, this depth would not be so great as night at first be supposed, or such as to be incompatible with its public use. The tunnel being arched with prick, and water tight, cars without tops could be used, so that the height from the floor to the top of the arch need no: be more than nice feet—sufficient space for a tall person to freely move or stand, when raised a foot from the

the gloom and dread inspired by passing through ordina The cars could be made with seats, like two sofas pu The cars could be made with seats, like two sofas puback to back, so as to carry many persons, without having great width; and their not having tops, or being exposed to the weather, they could be made so light that case horse could draw nearly as many persons on one of them as are now drawn by two on the ordinary city cars; besides which saving in power, there would be that of a conductor, for on such a road one person could fill the estices of conductor and driver.

The rails of this road being laid on wood, it would make a smoother and more pleasant road to ride upon than the stone laid city roase; and from its not being exposed to the weather, and the lightness of the cars, it would require less repairs than any other railroad in the world.

Soer; and fourteen feet between its walls would allow ample space for two cars, six feet wide, to pass. Such a bunnel, being whitewashed, and lighted by opening; and would require less repairs than any other rauroad in the world.

Spiral stairways, at proper distances apart, would lead to and from the tunnel, and there being two at each landing, would prevent any confusion or delay among those going to or from the road; and having stairways on each side of the street would prevent all possible danger from persons crossing or ever being on the track. From not having to stop for other vehicles, and from the facility of getting on or off such care, a greater speed could be attained, or a greater distance gone in a given time by them than by any other city care; and by tarveling in the tunner the extremes of heat and cold would be avoided, for it would be comfortably warm in winter and refreshingly ecol in summer.

avoided, for it would be comfortably warm in winter and refreshingly ecol in summer.

This plan of relief will be objected to as depriving strangers of the pleasure of seeing our great thorougnfare as they pass through the city. To such, it may be answared, be there be no restriction upon the running of stages, and a sufficient number to accommodate strangers and ethers to whom its attractive sights will compensate for a little delay, will not interfere with its capacity as an avenue through which to convey merchandise, or endanger one's kimbs in crossing it. The great mass who travel Broadway, being restaents, to whom apped is of the greatest impertance, they would seek the more comfortable and rapid means afforded by the tunnel road. By a proper combination of interests, transfer tickets might be arranged to take one from the upper end of the road, on a stage, to any part of the city.

I have here, as briefly as possible, described the general plan on which such a road could be made, without going into many details, which, if particularly described, wend obviate many objections that may now arise in the public mind.

The Sacred Tableaux.

Having nearly completed my contrast with the manager of the Breadway theatre, and being about to remove the exhibition at my tableaux to a building not used for theatrical representations, I deem it not improper to address a few words to the public of New York in regard to certain violent attacks which have been made upon me; and I know that I shall be heard in a candid, generous spirit. The journal which has carried the motives and the character of my regressivations, has, I find, an established reputation obtained by aveiling itself of every opportunity to make personal and positical expital for its editors, by attacking the religion and the elergy of the Church of Rome, and by assuming an excusive and aggressive. American position. It were hopsess, then, a man a second of the church of Rome, and by assuming an excusive and aggressive. American position. It were hopsess, then, a man a contrast of the church of the ch am pleased; but if do no better than to lose nothing. I can afford at this time to be content.

Born in a Protestant country, (Prussis), whose system of education for the people is inferior only to that of this favored land, I am yet unable to discover in what respect my sacred land, I am yet unable to discover in what respect my sacred lableaux differ in their effect upon those who ace them from the great works of Rubens and other masters, of which they are the faithful reproductions. But, as I am accustomed to respect the religious feeling of all countries, I am glad to observe, by the generous support of the press and the nublic, that in the metropolis of this great country my representations have not tailed of the approval as well as the admiration, which they have received throughout the civilized world. Offer my exhibitions to the citizens of New York as a gallery of sat, in which, as in all the great galleries of Europe, (the master speces of which I be into before the eyes of those who else might saver see them), sacred and produce subjects long saids by side; the effect of both upon the succasage depending entirely upon the soirit in which he looks at them.

Sewing Machines and the intringement of patenta,—The patents of I. M. Singer & Co. upon sewing machines have been triumphantly surlained by trisls in the United States courts. First, in a suit against the Kreefstor Sewing Machine Company, a verdict was recovered in New York; and secondry, in the United States Circuit Court, he da Trenton, N. J., en the 31st of March 1856, after a contested trial of a suit against the Dorcas Sewing Machine, we obtained a clear verdict for the distring the staints. These suits confirm the validity of our patents, and especially solid let great question of our exclusive right to the Indisconsible device in a sewing machine of a yielding pressure to hold the cloth to the surface of the machine. We have similar suits now pending in several Circuit Courts of the United States against the Grover & Baker machines, and the Wheeler & Wilson machines, each of which clearly infringe three patents owned by us. A trial in the city of New York of some of these suits is expected to take place this present month. Our claims are just; they have already been repeatedly custained by courts and juries, and we hereby caution the public post to purchase or use any of the infringing machines, if they pate the infringing machines, if they desire to escape litigation and trouble.
